

Nature Art

17th April 2015

This weeks Nature Art class had us working as a team on a large scale art mural.

In the large table we had a huge pile of mixed objects but this time there was a wonderful variety of both colours and textures. After a short discussion about colours and the variety of things we could find in the mix we got to work. Even while we were talking the students were naturally deciding and sorting the colours so we decided to use this idea as part of our artistic process.

I started the mural by drawing a big spiral on the paper and the asked for some requests, a small spiral here a medium spiral there and suddenly spirals were the theme for the day! I was so impressed with the way everybody gave careful consideration to both placement and size.

I was also truly impressed at how everybody worked together deciding where to place the different colours and helping each other complete each section. Well done art team!!

Join us next time for some amazing abstract nature art sculpture!

See you all next time for more arty adventures
